IN MEMORY OF DAVID CAMANCHO

A Friend

A lone flower standing among weeds
Reminds me of a friend.
Quiet, delicate, gentle, yet strong.
Standing among others of a different kind.
Her quality enhanced.
Serenely standing up for what she believes.
A friend to surrounding weeds and flowers,
Friendly to anyone.
Yet in a shy, bashful way.
Looking to the sun's bright rays,
She smiles a lot.
As a flower who looks for its light.
She blooms with a beauty all her own,
Not shared by any.
Complete. Full. Tranquil. Yet content.

Ode To Our Former Friends

Each person we meet offers much to us — molding our lives of clay until the masterpiece is complete, which is only when life has ceased. As we travel the highway of life, many sculptors we meet on the way; Each contributes, in part, to our lives by adding what they have to give. But as we touch on the lives of others, and they, in turn, touch ours, let's not forget those from the past who accepted us gracefully for what we were; bind them carefully to the pages of our minds; frame the color memory of them and hang it in our hearts; Thank them for the way they've helped to shape us into what we've become, and hope we've helped them, if even in a small way, to be the best they can be — include them in our prayers.

My Grandmother****

Perhaps one of the most influential people in my life was my grandmother because of her unique, intriguing personality. Her many colorful, vibrant traits and idiosyncrasies gave her personality rich qualities, ones that will always remain vivid in my mind.

One distinctive feature in her personality was her intensity. Everything that she did had her full, devoted attention. Whenever I had a problem with homework or even a personal matter she was willing and ready to respond to my needs and also the needs of others. She was fervent about life to the extent where even daily chores were exciting. I can remember when I would help her clean house and she and I would polish brass, tell marvelous stories and solve the problems of the world. She tackled each new job without complaint, in sickness or in health. When my grandfather was very sick she insisted on taking care of him personally until he had to be taken to the hospital. When this occurred she was totally depressed and confused because she had been so intensely involved with his care. Her strength and deep devotion shown through from a very simple moment like polishing brass to the very difficult one, when her husband died.

Not everything in her character was so intense and serious though. She had a keen wit and great sense of humor. I recall having long lively conversations with her where she would present a problem "to stimulate my mind." She would often quote Chaucer and Longfellow or explain how English was derived from Latin. Her mental keenness and intellect surpassed anyone that I had ever known, and she used her knowledge to the fullest extent; she not only got her students to like what they were learning, but to love it. She was inspiring and encouraging, educative and expressive, and these qualities in her personality are perhaps the ones that many of her students remember vividly of her as a teacher.

But I remember her as being aesthetic and sensitive too. She loved beauty of both sound and sight, famous finely-detailed paintings and gorgeous richly textured melodies. She was especially sensitive musically and that has influenced me. We would often play duets or sing and I remember her voice as she sang through a rich, resonant line from a Beethoven symphony or a light lyrical line from a Gilbert and Sullivan opera. At Thanksgiving the familiar "We Gather Together" was one of her favorites and everyone would gather together to sing and rejoice life with her. Her sensitivity and spirit at all occasions were particularly touching to all that were closely related to her.

Finally, I must tell of virtues that she fought to instill in us (meaning the younger generation). They were graciousness and good manners, and forever we will remember the dinner table where gracious acts of decency and manners were embedded in our little souls.

She taught us and in doing so instilled in all of us parts of her personality that we will never forget. She enriched our lives and many others' lives and I believe anyone who had any contact with her knew her personality to be unique and totally individual, and, too, filled with great beauty.

The Jock

He walks through life
dreaming with every step he takes,
Learning from every mistake that he makes.
He knows it's only a matter of time, till he discovers the full extent of his mind.
Even all the hiding he does and all that he loves, will soon turn away and leave him astray come his graduation day.
But his memories hold dear as he struggles with a tear.
For surely he knows his time will unwind to reveal all that he was born to be, all that he could not see!
His impression in our hearts shine through clearly from the many friendships that he made, far beyond the laughs that he gave.

The Most Crucial Event In My Life

The single event in my life that has had the most effect upon me was the change of residence my family made when I was five. My parents, British by birth, had been living on the small Caribbean island of Tobago for nearly six years when tension started to appear between the blacks and whites living on the island. My parents stayed as long as they could on the island, but when hostilities were declared, they left rather than risking the personal safety of their three sons.

The news that we had to leave Tobago was, for me, a rude awakening. For five years, I had been living what some consider to be "the good life." I had no responsibilities during the day (being too young to attend school) and I spent my time either at the beach, playing with my many friends, who were mostly black, or playing games with my black nanny, Alice. Other diversions were: attending parades and marches at the military academy where my father taught, driving to the airport to watch the planes take off, and accompanying my mother on trips to what I thought was the mainland, in reality, the neighboring island of Trinidad.

Not only was the fact that we had to leave a personal trauma, so was the journey. The first twenty miles of the journey were crossed in the large, old sailboat belonging to my parent's supposedly crazy Polish friends, George and Eva. Unfortunately, it was rather rough, and the boat pitched and tossed. Every time it did so, waves would break on the deck above us and water from the bilge would somehow find its way inside the hold and thoroughly soak us. The trip was not continued, however. When faced with the insistence of my mother that we were not going another foot, George stopped the boat at Trinidad and allowed us to disembark. We quickly left the harbour, walked to the airport, and boarded a plane to continue our journey to America, presumably leaving George and Eva to continue their journey.

Even greater than the shock of leaving Tobago was the shock of arriving in America. The first real difference was the change in climate, as we arrived during the winter of 1970. The cold, dry air was a real change after five years of Tobago's tropical warmth and humidity. Another, and more interesting atmospheric phenomenon, was the change of seasons. Instead of Tobago's two seasons, one hot and dry, the other hot and rainy, this new country had four seasons, each with its own unique characteristics. The one season that I found hard to accept was winter. Not only did flakes of ice fall from the skies, but nearly all the plants died!

After the inevitable period of homesickness and loneliness, I made new friends, joined school, and settled down into my new life.

HIS PERSONALITY

He sits, long limbs outstretched, in an old homestead set back behind a leafy veil for privacy, his Honda put away in the garage, his Bluepoint Siamese meowing and purring beside him as he tunes his guitar. He's just a typical teenage boy in patched, faded jeans and a tee-shirt, enjoying the solitude of the moment. The dark eyes reveal amiability, sympathy, love and understanding, and when he smiles, they squinch up to tiny dark slits that sparkle and play with the light.

He walks with purpose, head tilted down, torso slightly forward, with the appearance of someone preoccupied with a tune he can't quite remember, or a memory long forgotten. His voice is energetic, unvarying and precise, with the touch of a Maine accent which he lets out now and then. There's another detail which lives strong in my memory; the cleanliness you can smell about him — the fresh smell of laundered clothes, ironed and hung for him every day by his much loved "Ma".

There are always good times with him. One of the special times that is deeply pressed within my mind's scrapbook occurred last February, as my acquaintance with him was just beginning, yet already blossoming into a deep relationship. The wind howled around us as we got into his friend's small car. There were six of us all together. We were going to the choral gathering in celebration of the fantastic performance which had just ended. Papa Gino's was our point of destination, and off we went, as he sat on my left, hands on knees, smiling and singing a deep bass along with an old sixties tune on WRKO.

During the remainder of the evening he captivated my attention just by being himself. Laughing and talking, he set me totally at ease amidst the raucous crowd; the warm vapors of linguica, pepperoni, and mushroom pizzas swirling and curling about our faces.

One trait I believe I failed to mention before is his enduring tenderness. Being extremely sensitive, he can discern my every need or problem, being able to almost read my mind through my eyes or by the tone of my voice. As he lends his ear to my difficulties, his eyes seem to grow deeper to reveal the sympathy and warmth I was searching for, and as he nods, affirms my beliefs, and makes the most all-out efforts to boost me up and over the top of that obstacle I thought was much too great to overcome.

If my moodiness persists, he fights the wrong by initiating and infantile thing called a "tickling fight", and making me laugh so hard and loud I cry. Silliness is one of his specialties, so, as well as the tickling, I have to suffer through grimaces of all kinds along with weird phases and accents. He always wins me over with those tactics, and soon he's totally obliterated what was bothering me.

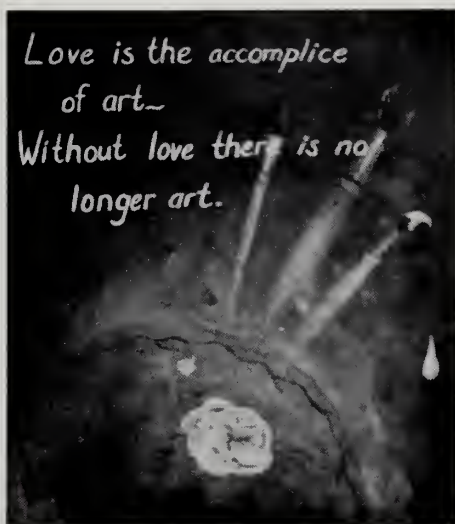

Hopefully, by now you have a picture of him. He's many wonderful things gathered into one body, combined wonderfully and so precisely to form his personality.

His presence is so captivating
Walking with a noticeable aire.
His eyes . . .
How to explain them?
Dark pads of endless knowledge
Bright rings of fire
Holding you spellbound in its secrets.
He has strength knowing no bounds
while being ever so tender.
Try to leave his presence if you can,
He'll look at you with those hard,
Yet magnificent windows of his soul . .

You will be powerless
Falling into a trance.
He controls everything.
He controls time.

A Mother's Unsaid Words

Come on children, gather 'round, Your sun has just begun to shine.

All your future is ahead of you, just a little past behind.

I'll tell you what you need to know, then if you will, you may go.

Something simple will be told, be warm in your heart and never cold.

Be a scholar at love and hold ignorance to hate, but remember most of all learn all you can, it's never too late.

You're free now, the world is yours, tame it if you can, come back, I'll tend to your battle sores.

The Barn

The small boy pushed on the heavy door with all his weight and it opened, pulling him out of the dimly-lit cow barn. Balancing himself, he was overwhelmed by the fresh air and bright sun. He breathed in the coolness, and leaving the big door open, ran to the car. This was his farm. He knew all the workers, the sheds, and the animals. The owners liked him, and he liked them. He went there often, and before long the farm became part of him, and he was a small part of the farm.

When he started going to school, he went there less and less. Time went by, and soon he went past the aging homestead on his way to work in the city. Once-in-a-while he would stop by to see the old couple. The husband no longer ran the dairy, but he and his wife still grew vegetables for the market. Their son had gone away to start his own business, and they no longer hired workers. The old man took him for a "last trip" through the grey barns. The boy wondered what he had meant. Now the cows were gone, the inside was empty, and dust covered the cracked and peeling paint. The stanchions had broken, the sticky sweet smells and the noises were gone — the familiar spirit had departed.

He left the place as it was. He wished that something could be done about it. As he scanned the evening paper, the colored drawing of a shopping center caught his eye. Below this was a caption: "PROPOSED MALL TO BE BUILT OVER LEE DAIRY FARM, SOUTH BEND" The words were there, the plan was outlined but its reality was too final.

Ideas of pulling industry into the underdeveloped parts of the country had interested the city council for many years. The shopping mall idea was a good one. It would bring money into the area through taxes, and would attract people from nearby towns. Several types of chain stores along with the local merchants also brought about competition. Possible, the larger stores might run a few local businesses out of the market, but the locals didn't have as good a selection, anyway. One aspect of the new development was definitely not pleasing, especially to the people who bought the secluded land years ago: the advent of noise and city-type traffic. Besides that, the farm would have to be torn down. It represented the rural, unhurried life which had lasted for over one hundred years in its own setting. The dairy, because it had been there so long, bringing its own wealth to the city, was important in its day. Now a new age had come, and familiar but useless landmarks had to be sacrificed in order to bring progress.

The man who remembered the farm as a boy now brought his children to the shops and stores within the center. He tried to forget them, but memories of the past crept into his thoughts. They filled the empty stanchions with cows, they made his ears ring with the barnyard sounds, they even made him sneeze.

In Touch With Ancient Emotions

My sorrow runs deep
My sorrow runs deeper
Than the depth of the largest sea
Waiting for the dance to be free.
My humor is fake
My humor is more fake
Than what I thought had to be.
My hate is endless
My anger is strong
My hate is so endless
Like the hermit which if friendless.
My anger is strong
My anger is stronger
Than a nation's pride in search of a place to hide.
My feelings are ludicrous
My feelings are very ludicrous
Thinking there is no other life for us.
As to my love,
There is no existence.
As to my love,
There is no existence.
This is a constant,
As life and death's resistance.

Behold, the sun as my father, the earth as my mother, the waters as my sisters, and the winds as my brothers.

I live caressed by their presence and cradled by their being.

I am the only one of me, and I am loved by my parents, and cherished by my brothers and sisters.

For when I was born the sun shone brighter over the horizon, the wind sang sweeter through the air, the ocean rose to her highest reaches, and my mother, the earth, cried to let me live a short human life.

I am still warmed by my father's light, and still play by my sister's sides, and still are swept off my feet by loving brothers, but I long to be once again in my mother's unseen warm and loving arms, and once again by kissed by her tender lips few have bothered looking for.

A Costly Death

The tree stood straight and tall
Majestic in a forest green.
The wind it blows, the birds they call
Though we know not what they mean.
The tree is started as a seed,
Stood now a sturdy oak.
Furnished the forest with root and reed
And brightened forest folk.
Its leaves they clothed the plants below,
Its trunk was large and steep.
And protected the woods from nature's foe,
The winter—cold and bleak.
The tree it was so good for all—
Acorns it bore many.
And colorful it was in the fall
As a shiny copper penny.
Why did the axe fall hard and keen,
And halt the beauty there?
Why were the branches cut and preened
With only a stump to spare?
What beauty's made seems never kept,
The greatest, always lost.
For many of such a tree I've wept,
A death at such great cost.

Out of Control

I'm out of control
There's nothing that can stop me now
I'm out of control
I don't know what's happening now
I'm out of control
I'm out of control
I'm out of control
I'm just out of control.

Just a minute ago
Everything seemed so fine
But the feelings I now feel
Are like a mine field
Any second now, I'm ready to explode
I really don't know what cause it
But it just keeps building up inside of me
Until I'm ready to take a fit.

That's why I'm out of control
I'm out of control
There's nothing that can stop me now
I'm out of control
I don't know what's happening now
I'm out of control
I'm out of control
I'm just out of control

People around here
get me so damn mad
It's hard to reveal my anger
So I'll end up being depressed and sad
But when I've had enough
And that usually takes a long time
You better back off
Cause I wouldn't want to hurt you Caroline.

...I am an artist however ordinary my performance.
Running is for me what the dance is to others. The oldest and highest of the arts. My ancestors ran before they danced. And it is running, not dance, that gives me a perfect conformity of form and matter

Listen I don't like being this way
But you got to understand one thing
It's hard living from day to day
Dealing with ignorant people
Who always try to start crap
Then try to blame it all on you
And laugh when you have to take the rap.

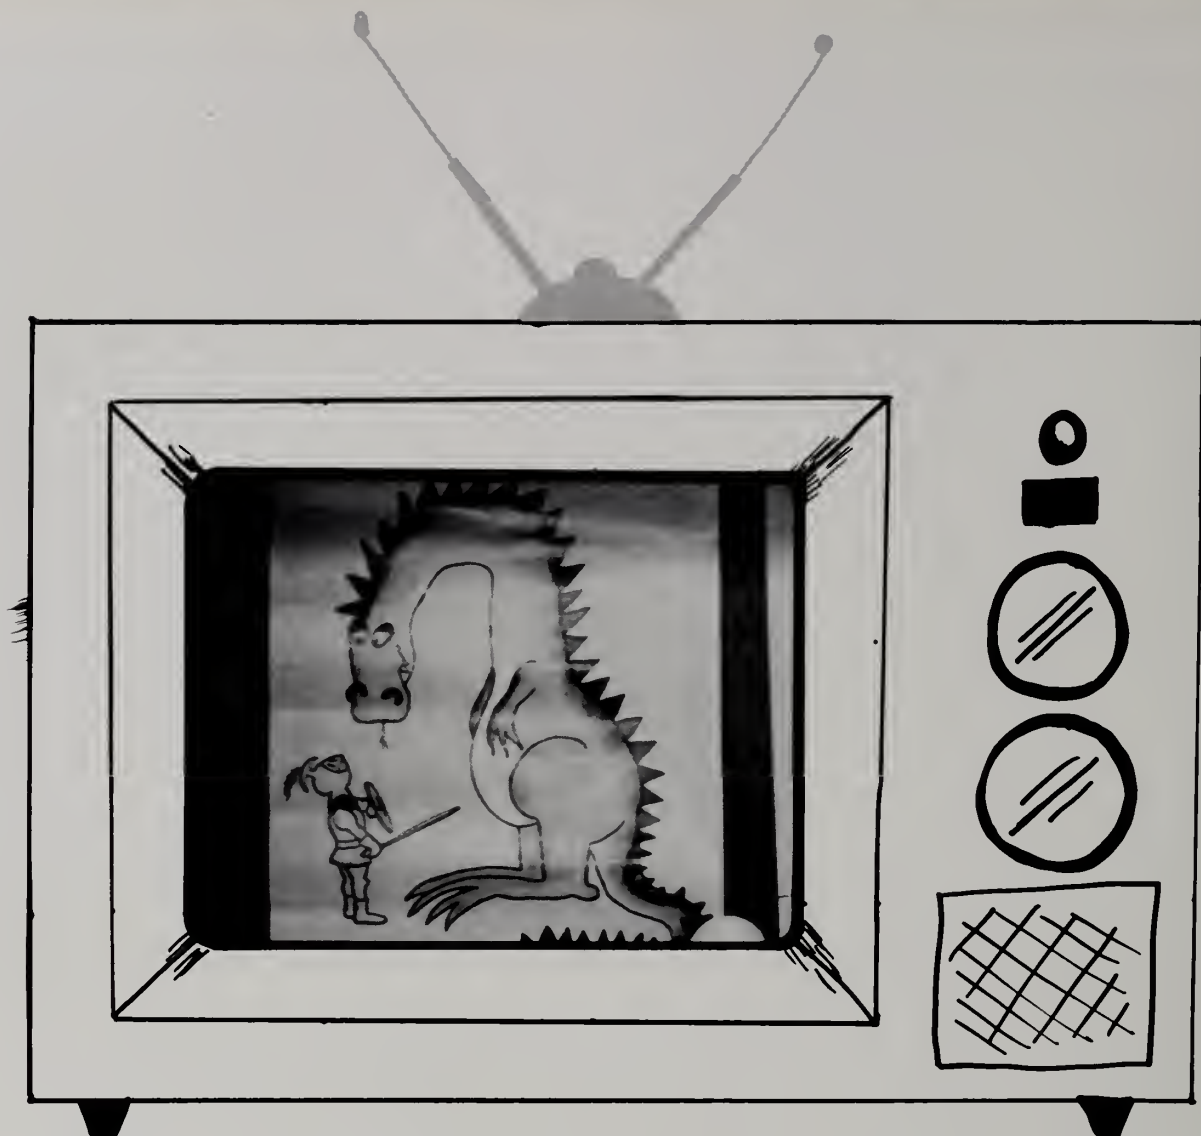

That's why I'm out of control
I'm out of control
There's nothing that can stop me now
I'm out of control
I don't know what's happening now

I'm out of control
I'm just totally out of control
There's no way, no how to stop
I'm just out of control
I'm out of control.

Violence on T.V.

Recently, while watching television, I witnessed the following scenario: An urban bus is travelling through New York City. One of the passengers on the bus reaches into a duffel bag and produced a sub machine gun. Suddenly, there is the familiar rat-a-tat-tat as the passengers riding the bus are mowed down like bowling pins by the man's insane outburst. The camera zooms over to the driver of the bus, who is violently and methodically cut to ribbons by the hail of bullets raining on him from the powerful automatic weapon. Meanwhile, the out of control bus careens off the highway and into a building, exploding into a huge ball of flames from the impact.

To the average T.V. viewer, this scene I have just described will probably not seem remarkable, or even unusual. There is a very good reason for this. The violent episode I have related could possibly be an episode on any of a number of currently popular T.V. shows. The fact is, the small screen is filled with such violent actions on any given night. To me, this is an appalling, disturbing statement on the mass of the people in this country today. The fact that the average American derives pleasure from seeing an insane mass murderer slaughter dozens of innocent people with a machine gun tells me that something is wrong in this society of ours.

Even worse than the fact that people actually enjoy seeing violence on television is the very real danger of real life acts of violence that are "inspired" by some of today's T.V. shows. Many mentally unstable people confuse the fantasy world of television with the real world. Many convicted criminals that committed violent crimes have stated that they got the idea for the crime from a particular T.V. show where they saw the "bad guys" get away with it. To think that even one death has been caused by what is supposedly an entertainment source is tragic.

Another sad affect that violent television shows have on people is the desensitvity they create. From early childhood, this nation of T.V. viewers is saturated with violence on television. Even the most popular cartoons have the element of violence as their main drawing card. Studies on violence and television have revealed that the average person in America witnesses thousands of murders by the time he is a teenager. As a person views more and more violent crimes on T.V., he is slowly but surely desensitized by it all. When you stop and think about it, isn't it rather amazing that people can sit passively watching as someone is brutally stabbed, raped, or other violent act? This is the effect that violence on T.V. has on a person. He can sit and watch a murder with as much emotion as watching a golf match. Because he has seen it so many times before, it has little or no emotional affect. This can cause problems when someone is confronted with a real tragic event. After seeing the same thing happen so many times before without consequence, the reality of the situation could possibly have a traumatic affect on the person.

In my opinion, there is entirely too much violence on T.V. today. Certainly, there is no redeeming value to violence on T.V., and there are many negative aspects to this type of programming, as previously stated. However, as long as these violent programs continue to score high on the Neilson Ratings, I am sure that they will continue. I suppose if that's what the general public wants to see, they are entitled to it. As for myself, I read enough horror stories in the daily newspapers of gangland slayings, rapes, and brutal beatings that I don't feel the need to turn on my television and be "entertained" by more of the same.

Living in the Future

This world is in a complete uproar
The man without a country has died
So what will happen now
No one cared, no one cried.
The mad king sitting high on his throne
He plants a seed in everyone that's around.
They don't dare make any move or sound.

I'm living in the future
I'm living in the future.
It's really a drag living in the past.
And I hate living in the present
I just gotta know what I'm doing tomorrow
I always try to think ahead
By the time I'm done thinking it's here
So I start planning out next week instead.

There's really so much going on today
And it's your choice what to do.
You might make many mistakes
But hey, nobody's perfect, too.
You say, "I wish I didn't do this or that"
But you keep on wishing and wishing
And before you know it, you wished your whole life away
Let me tell ya, wishing isn't doing
Yea, wishing isn't doing.

I'm living in the future
I'm living in the future.
It's really a drag living in the past.
And I hate living in the present
Because it goes by so damn fast.
I just gotta know what I'm doing tomorrow
I always try to think ahead
By the time I'm done thinking it's here
So I start planning out next week instead.

I'm living in the future
It's the only way to go
Maybe I'm escaping reality
But no one will ever know.
I'm living in the future
I'm living in the future.
In my mind, I can paint a beautiful picture
That's a reason why I'm living in the future
So I can paint a beautiful picture
I'm living in the future
Yea, I'm living in the future.

Seniors' Last Day

The time has come to say good-bye,
There's no time now for tears to cry.
The halls are empty, you're walking free,
No one can tell you where you should be.
The classrooms aren't full, no one is near,
What you once hated you hold so dear.
Be happy for all that you had before,
Now hold up your head, walk out that big door.

Who Needs Friends?

Did you ever have a friend you said you didn't need, but then realized you couldn't do without him? Weren't you sorry you said all those things behind his back? I feel having friends should be very important to all of us. They become so important in times of our deepest depressions. They can be such a comfort. They are there to help when we need someone to reach out to. They become special to us when we are celebrating as most of us do not like to celebrate alone. Best of all, you do not need a reason to be with them. Just keeping each other company is a large part of most friendships. My friends always seem to be able to pick me up when I'm down. One friend is always by my side through bright and dim days. If it weren't for this friend, my life would be a total wreck. She was there when my parents were separating — either to help me understand or just to comfort. She is always by my side; when I'm ill, when I'm in pain. Unfortunately, at some weak moment, I let someone else tear our friendship apart. Do not let people do this. Some people are jealous of a good friendship and will try to ruin it. Life is too short to be broken apart and destroyed. It's not the easiest thing to keep a friendship, but if you always stay honest with one another and never stop communicating, it will work. Writing short notes or dialing the phone can be a simple task. My friend is someone I'd never want to lose or hurt again in any way. Our friendship is important to my very being. Thank you Mary for being a true friend forever.

The time has come for us to say good-bye
 we knew it would come but not so soon.
 We remember the times you made us smile,
 We remember the times you made us cry,

RIDE-AROUND

Why was our ride-around taken away?

Mr. Simas — 1. Over the past two years, there have been ten accidents. 2. The signs on the cars referring to people in school and using profanities were not in good taste. 3. There has been heavy drinking before the ride-arounds of the past two years. The administration is concerned about the safety of the students and feels that not having it would be safer than having one. Also, we have a good senior week and super graduation planned so we wouldn't want to jeopardize the early senior release by foolish mistakes.

Is there a chance of future ride-arounds?

Mr. Simas — I don't really know — I'm fearful of safety and injuries.

YEARBOOK

How does a yearbook come into being? There are many long hours involved over the weekends, after school, and even during the summer months. There are times of utter frustration when things had to be done over and over again. There were small and large aggravations, and, at times, even hostility. But thanks to the total dedication and perseverance of the yearbook staff, we have a yearbook to be very proud of. All this was accomplished under the guidance of Mr. Capone, to whom we are extremely grateful for his time, effort, and patience.

 CLASS OFFICERS

MORE REMEMBER WHEN

We got out of school two weeks early.

In 8th grade we had gangster day?

Going outside for recess and playing squareball?

Sitting in 7th period waiting for 1:30 to come.

Milk was only 4 cents.

In middle school we had exhibits.

Mom would have our clothes out for us and tell us to wash up.

Coming into Apponequet as freshmen and not knowing where to go.

K. W. thought gopher was real?

Norma's car wouldn't start everytime we went out.

Teri's car rolled down the hill because she put it in park?

The football games.

Mr. Goodfellow drove on the wrong side of the road on the way back from a student council convention.

Male cheerleaders. Woow!

Everyone spilled beer on Norma & Al at Cindy's party.

Our first pep rally.

Cindy's party and all the broken windows.

Kevin conducted the band at the football game.

We went roller skating.

We all went out after concerts.

Cindy and the mint?

Sharon, the bug, and the balloon.

Jeff & Cindy had a perfume and Olive- oil fight and Mr. Ahern wouldn't let them back into class.

The pigeons flew into the pep rally— dead?

Sharon checked out the waiters at the prom?

You were called to the office and you didn't know why?

Yvett took a trip down the hall on the first day of school?

No money was made at the crepe breakfast and the French Club dance?

Mr. Mitchell stole Sharon's test tube in advanced chemistry?

Dianné and her big notebook?

Mr. Lagadec always said, "are you following me"?

Stiff rode his motorcycle down the hallway?

Linda tried to trip someone and tripped herself instead?

We had to put up with Chuckles?

Mr. W. picked his nose?

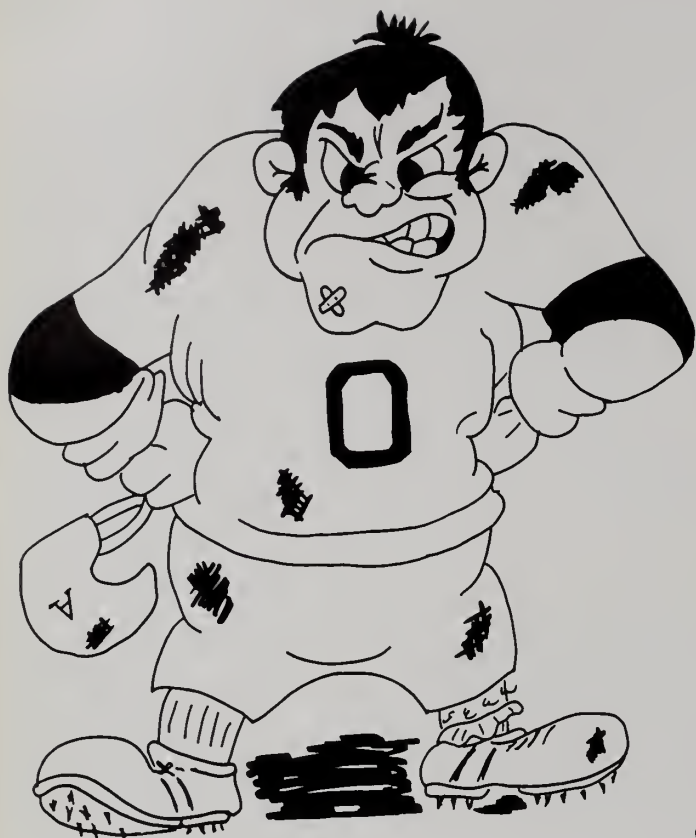

The hostages in Iran were freed?

Cheryl and Marcle got chased down Freetown St. by a cow?

The 1980 football team wasn't supposed to win a game all year?

We didn't nail Chuck in Business law?
